BROKER REPORTS $120,000

ROBBERY

Wallet Containing Bonds and Stocks, He Says, Was Missed on Fall River Line Puritan While He Was on Way from New York to Boston—Police Working on Case

Colonel Henry W. Comstock, a wealthy broker whose home is in Denver, but who has been located in this city for several years, reported at Police Headquarters to-day that he had been robbed of securities valued at more than $120,000 while en route for this city last night from New York on the steamer Puritan of the Fall River line.

Chief Inspector William B. Watts, who had a long conference with Colonel Comstock, posted the names of the securities that are mysteriously missing. The theft involves 1,665 shares of railroad stock and 243 shares of United States Steel preferred. The total value at market prices is $120,445.

Colonel Comstock went to New York last Wednesday to attend to some business. He got the securities that he believes were stolen, in connection with a deal the particulars of which have not been made public, and started back to this city with them last evening. The securities were in a large leather pocket book. It is said that he missed them before the boat landed at Fall River.

STEAMBOAT SEARCHED.

The man made known his loss, and a search was made on the Puritan without any success. He then came on to Boston and, jumping in a cab, drove to the United States Hotel, where he makes his home in this city. Hastily calling his secretary, Mr. Bow-man, the two drove to police headquarters, and the robbery room made a call.

It was at the hotel while in this city and on for the past fifteen years," said the Atlantic City attorney, "that we were long distance telephone with F. J. B. Brown, owner of the Puritan River Line at Fall River."

"I haven't heard anything of any kind since the steamer was wrecked, nor our line which arrived in Fall River the day after the disaster," stated the captain of the steamer and would have been glad to have seen the body of one of the sort had happened. Captain Chase said that he did not know whether or not he goes in early each directly home before breakfast and that he has never seen any of the officers of the boat since they

After the conference at police headquarters, the broker and his secretary drove to the United States Hotel. When a reporter of the BOSTON AMERICAN called at the hotel, Colonel Comstock refused to be seen in reference to his robbery. Mr. Rowman was sent, and he said that the Colonel could not discuss the matter at this time.

Condemned Woman Hears Favorite Hymns Sung by 3 Murderers Who Will Live. STILL IGNORANT OF FATE

By J. Frank Davis.
Special to the Boston American.
The condemned woman, Mary Rogers, straining her ears, listened to the sound of music from the prison chapel yesterday. It was the weekly religious service for the male prisoners. The music, however, was not the side bar in the prison, but a little service of their own on another day. It is the same to her, for she is not allowed to attend either.

A copy of the hymn book that is used at all the services here on her table. She is familiar with almost every hymn in it. She reads them, recites them and tries to sing them. Some of them, those that have been frequently used in the women's service, so that she can associate the air with the words, she can sing. It was one of these that followed the prayer in the Sunday service.

Hears Favorite Hymn.
Through the open chapel door, across the quadrangle and up to the bars of her room floated the music, a trio of male voices, and a rustic organ. This was the hymn and she followed it wistfully, note after note.

Speak to my soul, dear Jesus, speak to my soul, dear Jesus, speak to my soul, dear Jesus.
This hymn, which she had heard so often, was the one that she had heard so often. It was the one that she had heard so often. It was the one that she had heard so often.

Speak to my soul, dear Jesus, speak to my soul, dear Jesus, speak to my soul, dear Jesus.
This hymn, which she had heard so often, was the one that she had heard so often. It was the one that she had heard so often. It was the one that she had heard so often.

Deacon Holds Shiloh Against Pastor for 12 Hours; and Then Nails Up Door.

POLICE ATTEND SERVICES

FALL RIVER, June 12.—The funeral church service, that probably ever took place in Fall River is now being fought out in the Shiloh Baptist church on Bennett street. At 10 o'clock the door of peace was kept within the church by Captain Brown and a detachment of police under him, while one faction occupied part of the baptismal platform on the opposite side, and another faction, the converts. The noise ended by the invaders pulling up the front door with a pole.

The trouble started between the pastor, Rev. William W. Smith, and Deacon William Wheeler. These two men had been in the church for some time, and were known to the congregation. The trouble started when the deacon, who was a member of the church, was asked to read a prayer at the service. The pastor, who was also a member of the church, objected to this, and the two men began to quarrel.

On a succeeding night the deacon, who was a member of the church, was asked to read a prayer at the service. The pastor, who was also a member of the church, objected to this, and the two men began to quarrel.

Pastor Refuses to Be Deposed.
That congregation voted that the members of the church, who were present, should elect a new pastor. The pastor, who was a member of the church, refused to be deposed, and the congregation was divided.

Sometimes they are something worse than strangeness in the young faces that stare at them. Sometimes they are the children they have raised above themselves at the cost of what self-respect they have. Sometimes they are, as Father knows, are ashamed of them. Sometimes they are, as Mother knows, are tragedies of disappointment.

The first is the disappointment of Mother. She has been disappointed and she finds out that marriage does not bring her the happiness she had dreamed of, but that they have taken the consolation of her children, and hope begins to ebb. She begins to feel that she is getting old.

Not that she has striven for, and there is no other instrument in a man's life than that when he is in sympathy with the bill clerk in his office, the waiter in the restaurant, the freckle-faced errand boy in his service, and the girl in the next room.

Nor can anybody measure the depths of what a mother suffers when the children are disappointed and disappointed to find consolation for all their troubles in the mother. She has ideas and ways that seem to the mother monstrous and shocking. She has a sense of duty and devotion. The daughter is rampantly

The comes the second tragedy of divorce. When the sons and daughters return from college, and the parents find that they have nothing in common with their children, and that the girls' boy-friendship they had looked forward to is a thing of the past, they realize that they are rearing a new people, who have lost to the old the respect and the reverence, the good politeness and fringed interest which were the life of the old. The mother dreads the disappointment is bitter than the first because there is nothing then left in the child to turn to. The mother and the man and woman can look forward to nothing.

When you hear a hard-headed, hard-fisted old man call his college-bred son a "dumb fellow," or a mother say to her girl, "You are a little too good for me," the girl comes home to deride her mother's taste, sneer her opinion and advice, and to tell her mother that she is

The mother adores Marie Corelli. The girl scoffs at anything but the Bible. The mother is rigidly conservative. The girl affects bohemianism.

The mother dreads democracy and has looked forward to revelling in the glory of a beautiful young daughter who was a belle. The girl refuses to do anything but settlement work.

A Secret.
My profits, after paying all expenses, last year amounted to $200,000."
"Impossible!"

"That's just what I am wanting," said Braine.

"I agree," said Armstrong. "Can I do anything else but agree?"

"Very well," said Fergus Braine, "then our bargain is concluded. eh. Mr. Armstrong?"

The millionaire bowed his head. To Rob.

A NEW PUBLIC OWNERSHIP IDEA

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:
At this time, when discussions of muni-

pal ownership of light, heat, etc., are paving the way toward better conditions, it seems to me that some space in your public-spirited paper, given to exchange of opinions on a kindred subject, may be fraught with ultimate, if not immediate, benefit.

I refer to the United States Government, through Congress, making proper royalty contracts with inventors of money-saving and labor-saving devices, which, instead of being controlled by capitalists, shall, in future, be owned by the Government; or in other words, by the people; to be enjoyed by them at a minimum cost, instead of confining their benefits to the rich, as heretofore.

Proper bills put through Congress by the Congressmen who represent those to be

There are, I believe, no laws at present covering this simple and, it seems to me,

How are the people to enjoy the products of the inventive brains of to-day? By giving up all to capitalism or by demanding that Congress adopt for the good of the people such discoveries as better their condition? Contracting with the people

Through your courtesy I offer this problem for argument.
